BAR

Welcome to Humboldt Bar. Did you just walk off Humboldt Street to get here? Ever wonder who that's named after? Us too.

Alexander von Humboldt (1769-1859) was a visionary German naturalist and polymath who sought to understand the world as a whole—forever changing the way we understand nature. In his search to understand everything he traveled across the earth; exploring rivers deep, mountains high, and showed the world for the first time that nature is a complex and interconnected global web. He was a radical. At one point he was even considered the most famous man in the world, inspiring a generation of thinkers including Darwin, Thoreau, Muir, and Goethe to rethink how the world works and to evaluate our place within it.

We created a cocktail menu based off our favourite Humboldt stories. Our drinks explore: the species he classified; the places he traveled; the intersections between his life with politics, art, and poetry; and the quirky traits he possessed. More than anything else, we designed a menu with you in mind. The cocktails are presented in order of flavour and approachability, and we promise you don't need to read a textbook to enjoy them.

Plus, there's Champagne.

Please enjoy.

The cyanometer was invented in the 18th century to measure the blueness of the sky at different altitudes. In 1802, on an ascent of the Andean mountain Chimborazo, Humboldt set a new record for the darkest sky ever measured—at the 46th degree of blue.

For our purposes, we are using the cyanometer as a tool to measure the approachability of our cocktails. The lower the number and lighter the blue, the more approachable the cocktail.
